FOLLOW IN THESE SCHOLARS' FOOTSTEPS

ADRIAN LEIBBRANDT,

Uitenhage-born Adrian Leibbrandt wants to be an electrical engineer. He has just completed Matric as part of the Class of 2016 at Daniel Pienaar High School. This SANRAL scholarship recipient says the agency's programme has taken a huge financial burden off his parents.

"I was introduced to the scholarship by my maths teacher. I applied immediately and was awarded the bursary. My parents have been struggling financially for the past few years," says Adrian. In the next 10 years, Adrian wants to be a qualified engineer.

"Different things motivate different people. My motivation is Nelson Mandela. He sacrificed his life for the people of South Africa. He established the Nelson Mandela Children's Fund and contributed a part of his salary to the organisation. He put the needs of this country before his own. It is my passion to make people's lives better."

When he's not studying, Adrian plays cricket. He's good at it and has represented the Eastern Cape for the past four years.

KHANYISILE NKOSI,

Softspoken scholarship recipient Khanyisile (Grade 12), lives in Gauteng. She got her scholarship application form from her uncle, a doctor. The scholarship helps her pay for extra subjects offered in her high school's curriculum. This exposes Khanyi to a wider variety of subjects and broadens her career prospects.

SANRAL's scholarship programme is not exclusively for pupils who are dead-set on a career in the infrastructure sector. It is the agency's way of giving back to the community, not just creating future engineers.

Khanyi says she's still deciding on whether to study medicine or accounting when she gets to university. She's not particularly keen on engineering. "But I do admire the value the engineering industry adds to our daily lives," she says. "In my own way, I want to contribute and make a change in people's lives too."
